is the Taking of the Assets Felony? We have never doubted the capabilities of Isham

G. Harris, and his aiders and abettors, to accomplish any degree of villainy; and therefore it was not with surprise that we learned, yesterday, of the developments which we give below, though it is a little astonishing how such a scheme could have been so boldly executed, without detection, through so long a period of time. Our readers are doubtless aware of the fact that a int committee of the two houses of the Legislature was recently appointed to examine into the affairs of the bank, and that, after taking a cursory glance at the work before them, asked to be discharged, as more time and labor would be required than could be bestowed upon it, by a mere committee; but at the same time, it was intimated that a bill, providing for a commission, to wind up affairs, would be the proper thing and accordingly Mr. Carter, one of the joint committee, but on his own responsibility, introduced such a bill, and it was appropriately referred, and, after being a short time in the hands of the bank committee, it adopted a substitute, to be offered in lieu of the original bill; and this fact became known, when the friends of the latter resolved to move a non-concurrence with the report of the committee, and with a view to presenting such facts as might sustain them in their course, they made some investigations into the condition of affairs, and while doing this, they found a note on the bank, dated 1856, and signed by Messrs. Torbett and Fisher, as president and cashier; and this fact at once attracted the attention of Mr. Carter, who knew that those gentlemen were not installed into office till

Determined to probe the matter to the bottom, Mr. Carter, night before last, called on Claiborne, who had charge of the books, etc., of the bank while in Dixie, and asked an explanation. "How did you discover that notes had been dated

In a portion of this, the blunder of dating it before these particular officers of the bank came into office had been made; but with regard to the remainder, and by far the larger part, this has not been the case, and hence there is no way of distinguishing the genuine from the spurious, except by a book in the bank, in which an exact account of the matter had been kept.

He wheeled barrow after barrow of earth into the sea, tugged from morning till night, until at last he raised a narrow causeway from the main land to a rock at the end of a long sand-bar. With pebbles, and shells, and stones from the river, he walled this causeway until it became permanent.
